

HOW WE CAN CLOSE INDIAN POINT, AND WHAT WE'LL HAVE WHEN WE DO:

A Voice in Our Community's Future

Closing Indian Point and transitioning to a clean energy economy would mean that the public interest finally prevailed over Entergy's corporate interest, and that our residents and communities were empowered to choose a better future for themselves.

The stakes of the decision we face on the future of Indian Point and energy generation in our region couldn't be higher. Using money and influence, Entergy has long dominated the regulatory environment and the media, and now seeks to dominate the decision on relicensing and steer public debate away from replacement power. Yet the choices we make now will impact our safety and health, and the quality of our air, water and lives for decades to come. They are too important to be skewed towards the interests of a private corporation indemnified at public expense, whose mission is to maximize profits for shareholders. All our citizens need a strong voice in the choices before us, and our communities need to be empowered to decide what kind of future they want. Clearwater is committed to lifting up the voices of people like you, and mobilizing the power of communities like yours.
